REPORT.

SLAVERY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 8, 1836.

Resolved, That all the memorials which have been offered, or may hereafter be presented to this House, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia; and, also, the resolutions offered by an honorable member from Maine, (Mr. Jarvis,) with the amendment thereto proposed by an honorable member from Virginia (Mr. Wise); together with every other paper or proposition that may be submitted in relation to the subject, be referred to a Select Committee, with instructions to report:

That Congress possesses no constitutional authority to interfere, in any way, with the institution of slavery in any of the States of this Confederacy; and

That, in the opinion of this House, Congress ought not to interfere, in any way, with slavery in the District of Columbia, because it would be a violation of public faith, unwise, impolitic, and dangerous to the Union. Assigning such reasons for these conclusions as, in the judgment of the committee, may be best calculated to enlighten the public mind, to allay excitement, to repress agitation, to secure and maintain the just rights of the slaveholding States, and of the people of this District, and to restore harmony and tranquillity among the various sections of this Union.

REPORT OF MR. PINCKNEY.

The Select Committee, appointed under the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the United States, of the 8th of February, 1836, viz:
“Resolved, That all the memorials which have been offered, or may hereafter be presented to this House, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia; and also the resolutions offered by an honorable member from Maine, (Mr. Jarvis,) with the amendment thereto proposed by an honorable member from Virginia (Mr. Wise); together with every other paper or proposition that may be submitted in relation to this subject, be referred to a Select Committee, with instructions to report: That Congress possesses no constitutional authority to interfere, in any way, with the institution of slavery in any of the States of this Confederacy; and that, in the opinion of this House, Congress ought not to interfere, in any way, with slavery in the District of Columbia, because it would be a violation of the public faith, unwise, impolitic, and dangerous to the Union: assigning such reasons for these conclusions as, in the judgment of the committee, may be best calculated to enlighten the public mind, to allay excitement, to repress agitation, to secure and maintain the just rights of the slaveholding States, and of the people of this District, and to restore harmony and tranquillity amongst the various sections of this Union:” respectfully submit the following report, in which they have unanimously concurred:

The subject referred is one of grave import. Your committee approach it with a deep sense of its magnitude and absorbing interest. They have long considered the movements in relation to this matter as fraught with incalculable evils, not only to the slaveholding States, but to every portion of our common country. They rejoice, therefore, that the great body of the people of the non-slaveholding States have come forward, as they have done, in the true spirit of American patriotism, to sustain their constitutional obligations to their Southern brethren, and to arrest the disturbance of the public peace. They rejoice particularly, that the Federal Legislature, acting under a deep sense of its responsibility to the nation, has also interposed its warning voice, and given a solemn expression of its judgment upon this exciting subject; and they feel assured, that as the Representatives have responded to the people, so the people will firmly and patriotically sustain the position now taken by their Representatives.

As moderation is essential to the discovery of truth, your committee will carefully abstain from every thing that may cause offence, or inflame excitement, in any section of the Union. But while they would make every allowance for the motives of individuals, where the objects contemplated are utterly destitute to society, they cannot too strongly express their condemnation of the conduct of the abolitionists, and their utter abhorrence of the consequences to which, if persisted in, it must inevitably lead. They feel assured that no man, or set of men, will be permitted to put the country and the Government at defiance, by persevering in machinations which threaten to bring the citizens of the different States into collision, and to overthrow the whole system of civil society itself, in the slaveholding portions of the Union. Your committee believe that the strength of the agitators has been greatly exaggerated, by themselves and others; but whether their number be small or great, there can be no doubt that they have done, and are doing, incalculable evil; and every true patriot must be aware that a crisis has now arrived in the political condition of the country, in which neutrality would be criminal, and in which he must determine between the suppression of abolition, and the destruction of the Union, and take his stand accordingly, for or against his country.

Your committee have learned with surprise, that the reference of this subject has caused dissatisfaction in certain portions of the South. While they deeply regret this circumstance, they beg leave to remark, that it is not only abundantly justified by precedent, but in entire accordance with the established usage and invariable policy, in relation to matters of this character; memorials praying for the abolition of slavery in the States, or in the District of Columbia, having always been either referred or laid upon the table. On the present occasion, the subject was referred for the express purpose of having a report "calculated to sustain the just rights of the slaveholding States, and of the people of this District, and "by allaying excitement, and repressing agitation, to insure the future repose and permanent tranquillity of the country. The House was unwilling, on the one side, to invade what was believed to be the right of petition, [a right equally dear to every portion of our people, and which, it is thought, could not have been denied in this instance, without establishing a precedent at least as hazardous to the South, as to any other section of the Union]; and it was desirous, on the other, to accomplish for the South, what could not have been effected by refusing to receive the memorials, the union of an overwhelming majority, in a solemn and determined stand against the views and objects of the applicants. Whilst the denial of the right of petition could have produced none other than the most mischievous effects, your committee are thoroughly satisfied that the course adopted by the House will produce a state of public opinion and feeling in the non-slaveholding States, eminently favorable to the constitutional rights and interests of the slaveholding sections of the Union.

The resolution under which your committee were appointed, naturally divides itself into several branches or propositions, each of which shall be considered in its order.

They are instructed to report, in the first place—That Congress possesses no constitutional authority to interfere in any way with the institution of slavery, in any of the States of this Confederacy.

Your committee will merely allude to this proposition, in obedience to the express direction given them by the House, and not for the purpose of entering into any argument respecting it. Unquestionably, if there is any political or constitutional principle, which the people of the United States consider as settled beyond all possible dispute or controversy, it is that the institution of slavery, as it exists in the States of this Confederacy, is municipal, not national, and that it belongs exclusively to the States, and can only be affected by State legislation. The power to regulate or act upon it, is one of the reserved powers of the States; a power which was not only not given, nor ever intended to be given, by the framers of the constitution, to the General Government, but which the States expressly and carefully guarded and retained to themselves, by that amendment of that instrument, (article 10) in which it is declared, that "all powers not delegated by the constitution to the United States, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." The subject of slavery in the States, then, is not an open question or matter of debate. The fact that Congress possesses no authority whatever to legislate respecting it, is one that can neither be strengthened by argument, nor made clearer by discussion. And your committee consider it most fortunate for the peace of the country, that it is so. He is indeed but little acquainted with the human heart, and has derived but little advantage from the lessons of history, who can imagine for a moment, if he knows any thing of the general character, or considers the political and physical strength of the people of the South, that even if the power of legislation on this subject had been expressly conferred on Congress by the constitution, it could be exercised against the consent of the States interested, without the certainty of civil war, and the probable dissolution of the Union. The declaration, however, which the House has so solemnly and discursively made upon this point, cannot fail, as your committee believe, to produce the most beneficial results. As the abolitionists care little for emancipation in the District, except as the precursor of a far more extended and general scheme, the presumption is, that having now no possible hope of Governmental interference with the States, and seeing the more than probable consequences of the exercise of such a power, if it were possessed, they will discontinue their machinations in relation to the District; a consummation devoutly to be wished by every patriot, in every section of the Union. But be the issue what it may, the House of Representatives has done its duty by placing this solemn declaration upon record. It is not only peculiarly proper in itself, considering the present state of the abolition question, but, if any justification were necessary, it is amply justified by precedent. In 1790, (and from that period to the present, the abolitionists have steadily aimed at general emancipation) several petitions, praying for the abolition of slavery in the States, having been presented and referred, the House finally adopted a resolution, amongst others, in which it announced to the petitioners, and to the country, "that Congress has no authority to interfere in the emancipation of slaves, or in the treatment of them, in any of the States, it remaining with the several States alone to provide any regulations therein, which humanity or policy may require." Upon the whole, your committee consider the instruction given them by the House upon this point, rather as a decisive expression of a great fundamental principle of constitutional law, than as a call upon them to sustain a questionable position. They are aware that some members voted against the instruction upon this point, under the impression that, whilst the principle asserted is unquestionable in itself, its assertion by the House, in this form, might seem to imply doubt, and to countenance the idea that it is really debatable. In this view, the members who thus voted, may be joined perhaps by many intelligent and worthy citizens of the slaveholding States; but your committee cannot believe that the assertion, in any form, by the House of Representatives, of a principle so important, and at the same time of so strong a local bearing, and particularly by a vote so nearly approaching unanimity as is recorded on its journal in favor of this instruction, can have a tendency to weaken that principle, or its binding and paramount influence upon Congress and the country in all time to come. The precedent above quoted from the Congress of 1790, shows that the House of Representatives of that day, so far from fearing the effect of such action upon its part, sought to record its solemn conviction upon this question of power in themselves, and has handed down to us its judgment, in precise accordance with our own. That House was largely, if not entirely, composed of men of the revolution, and many of its members are known to have been also members of the convention which formed the Federal Constitution. Since that period, nearly half a century has rolled away, and now that the successors of that House, acting under the same considerations, solemnly reaffirm the principle laid down by those great and good men, and avow it to be not only the settled opinion of this Congress, but of the great body of the people of the United States, may we not hope, and indeed conclude, that it will be hereafter deemed a solemn and deliberate exposition of the constitution, and that all attempts in future to violate those sacred compromises, which lie at the very foundation of our constitutional compact, or to excite apprehension on this subject, will be effectually counteracted and defeated. Your committee cannot but indulge a most confident and animated hope that these good effects will be produced by the present action of the House.

Your committee are instructed to report, in the second place—

That, in the opinion of this House, Congress ought not to interfere, in any way, with slavery in the District of Columbia.

1st. Because it would be a violation of the public faith.

To obey this instruction of the House in the manner pointed out by the resolution, it will be necessary to examine, to some extent, the relations between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia; the probable objects of the provision in the constitution, authorizing the cession of the District to the United States; and the consequent expectations which may have been rationally entertained by the States that made the cession, as to the exercise, by Congress, of the powers granted to it over the ceded territory. Before entering upon this examination, however, it may be well to remark that the powers of Congress over this District involved in this discussion, are wholly independent of, and derived from a source entirely separate from, the general legislative powers granted to Congress by the constitution. As the legislature of confederated States, the powers of Congress are equal, and of universal application, throughout all the States, and they were given to Congress before the cession of the district, and were held and exercised independently thereof. This will be made manifest by a brief statement of facts. The first Congress, under the constitution, assembled on the 4th of March, 1789, and the Government provided for by the constitution was organized on that day. The general powers conferred on the different branches of the Federal Government were exercised from that day forward; and the union of the States, under constitutional government, was then perfected and put in practical operation. The cession from Virginia, of that portion of the District of Columbia that belonged to her, was not made until the 3d of December of that year—nine months after the Federal Government had been in operation;* and the cession by Maryland of that portion of the District that belonged to her, (and in which the Seat of Government is in fact located,) was not made until the 19th day of December, 1791†—more than two years and nine months after the existence of the Government in its present constitutional form. Congress did not, in fact, remove to the District thus ceded, nor did the District thus ceded become practically the Seat of Government until the year 1800; and the laws of the States by which the District was ceded were declared, by an act of Congress of the 16th July, 1790,‡ “to be in force within the District until the removal of the Government to it, and until Congress shall otherwise by law direct.”

It appears, then, that the Federal Government was in operation under the constitution nearly a year before Congress possessed any power of local legislation over any portion of the District of Columbia, and nearly three years before that power became as extensive as the present bounds of the District, or included that portion of the ten miles square in which the Seat of Government is in fact located. It also appears, that the first act of the Federal Legislature in reference to its jurisdiction then partly acquired, and partly to be acquired, was to provide for the continuance, in all their force, and in every particular, within the District, of the laws of the States that made the cession, until December, 1800; a period of nine years after the time when the powers of Congress, as a local legislature for the District, were perfected by the State of Maryland. Nor is this all: by the act of 1790 it was declared, as has been already shown, that the laws of Maryland and Virginia should be the laws of the District, not only “until the time fixed for the removal of the Government thereto,” but also “until Congress shall otherwise provide by law.” No alteration, however, to any considerable extent has yet been made, and the laws of Virginia and Maryland which were in force at the time of their respective cessions, and in force respectively in the portions of the District ceded by each, still continue to be, in almost every particular, the local laws of the District of Columbia.

Such are the relations at present existing between the Federal Government and the District, so far as local legislation is concerned. The powers of Congress, as the local legislature of the District, were derived from the cessions by Virginia and Maryland, and the special grant of exclusive legislation, and not from the general powers conferred upon it by the constitution; and these special and local powers which Congress has now possessed for nearly half a century, have been exercised only to the extent above described; and, from the best information your committee have been able to obtain, to no other or greater extent.

The right of Congress to accept the cession of this territory from the States of Virginia and Maryland, is found in the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States, which gives it power “to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District, ‡ Laws United States, vol. ii, p. 113.

not exceeding ten miles square, as may by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of Government of the United States;" and the purpose for which the cession was to be made and received, is declared in the language of the constitution itself, "such District as may become the Seat of Government of the United States." The cession, therefore, was to be made for this purpose, and for no other; and as regards its use by the Federal Government, the object of this provision evidently was simply to authorize Congress to accept the grant, and to exercise the powers of legislation therein provided for.

It will be conceded by the committee, for the purpose of this report, that the cession was made in conformity with the power of Congress to receive, and that, therefore, by the cession from Virginia and Maryland, Congress is in possession of the powers which the constitution intended it should possess over the district intended to be ceded.

This brings us to the inquiry, as to the probable objects of the grant of "exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever," over the territory which was to constitute the seat of Government of the United States. In consulting the commentators upon the constitution, it will be found that the old Congress encountered inconveniences, and even dangers, from holding their sessions where State legislatures had exclusive local jurisdiction, and where State authorities alone were to be depended on in matters of police and personal protection. Indeed, an adjournment of that Congress from the State of Pennsylvania to New Jersey, for a cause of this description, which occurred at the close of the revolutionary war, no doubt contributed greatly to the introduction of this clause into the constitution of the Union. The proceedings of the old Congress show distinctly, that the acquirement of a territory for the seat of the Federal Legislature, over which it should have exclusive or special jurisdiction, was a favorite idea with that body, as early as the year 1783, and that it continued up to the time of the formation of the constitution. Upon this point your committee will only detain the House with a few of the resolutions adopted by the old Congress that go to establish it. On the 7th of October, 1783, a resolution was passed, "that buildings for the use of Congress be erected on or near the banks of the Delaware,* provided a suitable district can be procured on or near the banks of the said river for a federal town, and that the right of soil, and exclusive, or such other jurisdiction as Congress may direct, shall be vested in the United States." On the 21st of the same month (October, 1783) another resolution was passed, preceded by a preamble as follows: "Whereas there is reason to expect that the providing buildings for the alternate residence of Congress in two places will be productive of the most salutary effects, by securing the mutual confidence and affections of the States, Resolved, That buildings be provided for the use of Congress at or near the lower falls of the Potomac, † or Georgetown, provided a suitable district on the banks of the river can be procured for a federal town, and the right of soil, and an exclusive jurisdiction, or such other as Congress may direct, shall be vested in the United States."

On the 20th of December, 1784, the old Congress passed, among others, the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That it is expedient that Congress proceed to take measures for procuring suitable buildings to be erected for their accommodation.

"Resolved, That it is inexpedient for Congress, at this time, to erect public buildings for their accommodation at more than one place."

These resolutions by the continental Congress, as to the expediency and necessity for a territory for the seat of the Federal Government, over which it should have peculiar if not exclusive jurisdiction, are produced to show the origin of the provision in the constitution upon that subject, and the object for which the acquisition of such a territory was desired. That object, beyond all question, was to secure a seat for the Federal Government, where the power of self-protection should be ample and complete, and where it might be exercised without collision or conflict with the legislative powers of any of the States, so far as its exercise should be required for the great national purposes for which the peculiar or exclusive jurisdiction was sought to be obtained. The jurisdiction was made exclusive, not as your committee believe, and as they think every considerate citizen will admit, to change the object of the grant of the jurisdiction when it should be made, but to secure that object more effectually by making the Federal Government independent of State interference, and of State protection, within the district where it was to be located, and where its deliberations should be held. Had the legislative power of Congress over this District not been made exclusive, one of the great and wise objects intended to be secured, the prevention of conflict between Federal and State legislation, would have been necessarily defeated. Every statesman will admit the extreme inconvenience and danger of granting powers of legislation of the same character, and to be exercised within the same territory (powers of local and municipal legislation,) to two distinct and independent legislative bodies; and the extreme difficulty, if not impossibility, of so defining the portions of power to be exercised by each, as to prevent constant conflict and collision. This must have been the result, if any division of the powers of local legislation, within the District of Columbia, had been made between Congress and the States by which the territory was ceded to the United States. Congress required all that power which, through all time, would be indispensably necessary for its own protection, and also to render all the departments of the Federal Government independent of State authority, and entirely dependent on, and obedient to, the Federal Legislature, and it alone, in all matters of police or municipal legislation. The adoption of the Federal Constitution by the people of the several States with this provision in it, shows that the attainment of these objects was considered of paramount importance; and hence, in the judgment of your committee, the power in question was made exclusive.

Assuming the correctness of these premises, the next inquiry is, what expectations were the States by which the District was ceded, as well as their sister States, authorized to entertain as to the exercise by Congress of the legislative powers derived from these cessions? The cessions included not only a portion of the territory of those States, but also a portion of their citizens. To secure the great national objects intended by the cession, the jurisdiction of the States over those citizens, as well as over the territory of the District, was transferred to the Federal Legislature. This transfer, from the necessity of the case, abridged the rights of the citizens within the territory, who had been formerly entitled to vote for their legislators and other rulers, by subjecting them to a Government composed of persons in whose election they were to have no choice. Their governance, however, was confided to those entrusted with the common government of all the States; and when we reflect upon the confidence reposed in Congress by the States that made the transfer, and by the citizens transferred, it accounts at once for the readiness with which the cession was effected. Still, the question recurs, what expectations might reasonably be entertained by the States making the cession, by the other States of the Confederacy, so far as their interests were directly or indirectly involved, and by the citizens thus placed under the peculiar care of Congress, as to its exercise of the powers conferred upon it by this cession of territories for a seat of the Federal Government?

* Journals of the Old Congress, vol. iv. p. 288.

Your committee have no hesitation to say, in answer to this inquiry, that those expectations, by all the parties interested, not only might, but must have been, that Congress would exercise the powers conferred, so far as their exercise should be found necessary for the great national objects of the cession, with strict reference to the accomplishment of those objects; and that all other powers conferred by the cession would be exercised with an equally strict reference to the interests and welfare of the inhabitants of the District—those citizens of two free States who had been made dependent on Congress for their local legislation, for the protection of life, liberty, and property—rights guaranteed by the constitution to all the citizens of the Confederacy—in order that a seat for the Federal Government, subject to the exclusive control of Congress, might be granted to it. If these positions are correct, it follows necessarily that the institutions, the customs, the rights, the property, and every other incident pertaining to those citizens, and municipal in its character, which they enjoyed as citizens of the States to which they belonged before the cession of the District, and which did not then, and have not yet, interfered with the great national rights and privileges intended to be secured by the cession, should have been hitherto, and should be in all time to come, guarded and preserved with the same paternal care and kindness with which the Legislatures of the States, to which they belonged, would have guarded and protected them if they had continued to be intrusted to their respective jurisdictions.

Your committee rely confidently upon this as the great rule for the faithful action of Congress in reference to this subject. They feel assured that no rational man will differ with them. Two questions, then, remain to be considered, to determine whether Congress should or should not attempt to interfere with slavery in the District of Columbia viz:

1. Do the great national objects which were intended to be secured to the Federal Government by the cession of the territory require such action on the part of Congress?

Your committee will make no argument upon so plain a proposition. No individual within their knowledge, not even the most deluded fanatic, has ever asked, or attempted to justify, a measure of this description upon such a pretext. The security and independence of Congress, from the moment of its removal to this District to the present hour, have been as perfect as the framers of the constitution could have desired. No intimation has ever been heard that the existence of slavery in the District of Columbia has ever produced the slightest danger or inconvenience either to the interests or to the officers of the Federal Government within it. Surely, then, Congress cannot be called upon to interfere with that institution within the District as one of its duties growing out of the national objects connected with the cession; and if such interference is demanded from it, the demand must grow out of its relations to the District as a local legislature. This brings the committee to the remaining question.

2. Would the States of Maryland and Virginia, if the cession of this territory to the Federal Government had not been made, from any thing which has been shown to Congress, be induced to interfere with, or abolish, the institution of domestic slavery within it?

At the time of the cession from those States, slavery existed in every portion of their territory, in the same degree, and subject to the same laws and regulations by which it was authorized and regulated in the territory ceded to the Federal Government. It still exists in those States, without any material variation or modification of their laws respecting it. As those States, then, have not abolished it within the territories remaining under their jurisdiction, is it reasonable to suppose that they would have abolished it in the territory comprising the District, had they continued to retain their original jurisdiction over it? Can any reason whatever be given for the abolition of slavery in this particular District, which does not apply with equal force to every other slaveholding section of the country? Can any cause be shown why the States of Maryland and Virginia would have abolished, or would now abolish, slavery in this District, had it continued to form a part of those States respectively, which would not have warranted or produced general abolition throughout those States? Most unquestionably not! As those States, then, have not abolished slavery in the residue of their territory, it is evident that they would not have abolished it in the District of Columbia, if it had continued subject to their action. It follows conclusively, therefore, that Congress, as the local legislature of the District, and acting independently of the national considerations connected with its powers over it, is bound, for the preservation of the public faith, and the rights of all the parties interested, to act upon the same reasons, and to exercise the same paternal regard, which would have governed the States by which the District was ceded to the Federal Government. And it is unnecessary to add, that Congress has acted wisely in treating the institutions found in existence at the time of the cession, as the institutions of the people of the District; in continuing their laws and customs, as the laws and customs to which they had been used, and which should never be altered, or interfered with, except where the people themselves may be desirous of a change.

Your committee must go further, and express their full conviction, that any interference by Congress with the private interests or rights of the citizens of this District, without their consent, would be a breach of the faith reposed in the Federal Government by the States that made the cession, and as violent an infraction of private rights as it would have been if those States themselves, supposing their jurisdiction had remained unimpaired over their territory, had abolished slavery within those portions of their respective limits, and had continued its existence, upon its present basis, in every other portion of them. And surely there is no citizen, in any quarter of the country, who has the smallest regard for our laws and institutions, State and national, or for equal justice, and an equality of rights and privileges among citizens entitled to it, who would attempt to justify such an outrage on the part of those States. The question then is, Are the citizens of the District desirous of a change themselves? Has any request or movement been made by them that would justify an interference with their private rights on the part of Congress? None, whatever! The citizens of the District not only have not solicited any action on the part of Congress, but it is well known that they earnestly deprecate such action, and regard, with abhorrence, the efforts that are made by others, who have no interest whatever in the District, to effect it. It is impossible, therefore, that any such interference on the part of Congress could be justified, or even palliated, on the ground that it was sought or desired by those who are alone interested in the subject. If, therefore, Congress were to interfere with this description of property against the consent of the people of the District, your committee feel bound to say, that it would be as gross a breach of public faith, and as outrageous an infraction of private rights, as it would have been if such an interference had been committed by the States of which the District was formerly a part, supposing that it never had been ceded to the United States.

Your committee will here anticipate an objection which may be urged against this reasoning and these conclusions. They have shown that the powers of Congress over this District divide themselves into two classes, national and local; that in reference to the former, the action of Congress should be governed by the interests of the whole country, so far as they are connected with the branches of the Federal Government located within the District; that in reference to the latter, its powers are, and its action should be, those of a local and municipal legislature, extending its paternal care and protection over the citizens dependent upon, and subjected to, this branch of its authority; that in the exercise of its powers, the safest stand in reference to slavery is, what would the States to which the District originally belonged, and of which its citizens were originally citizens, have done in case their jurisdiction had never been transferred to Congress; and that those States would certainly not have interfered with the institution of slavery in the District, had the power to do so remained with them. The objection anticipated is, that the States in question have pursued an unwise policy as to themselves, and that their having done so should not have bound Congress, as the local legislature of the District, to a similar policy in relation to its government. To this, however, your committee consider it perfectly conclusive to reply, that under our institutions, that people is the best governer which is governed most in accordance with its own habits, interests, and wishes; that the policy hitherto pursued by Congress in reference to slavery within the District, your committee have every reason to believe, has been in perfect conformity with the wishes and interests of the citizens concerned; and that it will be time enough for Congress, acting as the local legislature of the District, and in that capacity bound to consult the governed, as the regulators of its action, to move in any matter relating to their private interests and rights when they themselves shall ask such movement.

There is another consideration connected with this part of the argument, which your committee think worthy of attention. It is this: that there is no law in the District prohibiting the master from manumitting his slaves, which he may do at his own discretion, and without incurring any responsibility whatever. Certain it is that no such law has been passed by Congress. The citizens of the District, therefore, have no necessity for the aid of Congress, should they wish the abolition of slavery among them. They have only to exercise an existing right, and their wish will be accomplished. Can there be more decisive evidence, then, that they do not wish the abolition of slavery, than that it continues to exist among them? or can any one desire more conclusive proof that any attempt by Congress to effect this object by the force of law would be an interference with the rights of private property, against the wishes and consent of those concerned, and for none of the purposes for which Congress is authorized by the constitution to take private property for public use?

Hence, your committee believe they have proved, beyond the power of contradiction, that an interference by Congress with slavery in the District of Columbia would be a violation of the public faith—of the faith reposed in Congress by the States which ceded the territory to the Federal Government, so far as the rights and interests of those citizens residing within the ceded territory are concerned.

Your committee will now consider this proposition in reference to the interests of the States of Maryland and Virginia. They were slaveholding States at the time they made their cession, and they are so still. They entirely surround this District, from which they are only separated upon all sides by imaginary lines. They made the cession for the great national objects which have been already pointed out, and they made it from motives of patriotism alone, and without any compensation from the Federal Government for the surrender of jurisdiction over commanding positions in both States. The surrender was made for purposes deemed sufficiently important, by all the original States, to be provided for in the constitution of the United States; and it was made in conformity with that provision of the constitution. It is surely unnecessary, after this statement of facts, to undertake to show that those patriotic States made this cession for purposes of good to the Union, and consequently to themselves, and not for purposes of evil to themselves, and consequently to the Union; and that the Government of the United States accepted the cession for the same good, and not for evil, purposes.

If, then, it can be demonstrated that the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia would produce evil, and not good, to the States that made the cession, the conclusion is inevitable that such an act on the part of Congress would be a violation of the faith reposed in it by those States. To all to whom this is not perfectly palpable without an argument, the following considerations are presented:

It has been already said that the States of Maryland and Virginia surround the District. It has also been shown that, in reference to slavery within the District, the relations of Congress are entirely those of a local legislature, and that its action therefore, in this capacity, should be governed by the same reasons which would have governed those States themselves in relation to this subject, if their jurisdiction over this territory had never been surrendered. Let us suppose, then, that this jurisdiction had never been surrendered by Maryland and Virginia, and that it was now proposed that they should abolish slavery, and relinquish all power of legislation over free blacks, within the portions of those States which constitute the District of Columbia, retaining their respective institutions of slavery in all the remaining portions of their territory. Who is there that would not be amazed at the folly of such an act? Who does not see that such a step would necessarily produce discontent and insurrections in the remaining portions of those States? Who does not perceive that under such circumstances the District would constitute at once a neutral ground, upon which hosts of free blacks, fugitive slaves, and incendiaries, would be assembled in the work of general abolitionism; and that from such a magazine of evil, every conceivable mischief would be spread through the surrounding country, with almost the rapidity of the movements of the atmosphere? Surely no one can doubt the certainty of the consequential evils in the case supposed. How then can any doubt or deny the dangers in the case before us? The territory is the same; it is surrounded by the same portions of slaveholding States; and the only difference is, that in the case supposed, the abolition would be the work of State authorities, while, in the other, it is sought to accomplish it by the authority of Congress. The condition of things before and after it is done, is the same in both cases, and the opportunities for mischief, in case the work be accomplished, are equal in both. Can it be necessary to say more, to establish the position, that any interference with slavery in the District of Columbia, on the part of Congress, would be a violation of the public faith, the faith reposed in Congress by those States, and without which they never could have been induced to have made that cession?

It only remains under this head to show that Congress could not interfere with slavery in the District of Columbia, without a violation of the public faith, in reference to the slaveholding States generally, as well as to the States of Virginia and Maryland. The provision in the constitution authorizing Congress to accept the cession of a territory for a seat of the Federal Government, and to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over it, was as general and universal as any other provision in that instrument. In its national objects all the States were equally interested, and so far as there was any danger that the powers of local legislation conferred on Congress might interfere with, or injuriously affect, the institutions of the various States, each State possessed an interest proportioned to the probable danger to itself. As far as your committee know or believe, however, no apprehension of an interference on the subject of domestic slavery was entertained in any quarter, or expressed by any statesman of the day. An examination of the commentaries on the constitution will show that various apprehensions were entertained, as to the powers conferred on Congress, by this clause, such as that privileged classes of society might be created within the District; that a standing army, dangerous to the liberties of the country, might be organized and sustained within it, and the like; but not a suggestion can be found that, under the local powers to be conferred, any attempt would be made to interfere with the private rights of the citizens who might be embraced within the District, or to disturb, or change, directly, or by consequence, the municipal institutions of the States, or that the subject of domestic slavery, as it existed in the States, could be in any way involved in the proposed cession. At that time, all the States held slaves. Many of them have since, by their own independent action, without influence or interference from the Federal Government, or from their sister States, effected, in their own time and way, the work of emancipation; others of the original States, remain as they were at the time of the adoption of the constitution, in reference to this description of property, and several new members have been admitted into the Union as slaveholding States. All the States which have held, or now hold, slave property, have invariably considered the institution as one exclusively subject to State authority, and not to be affected, directly or indirectly, by Federal interference. The practice of the Government, as well as its theory, has established this doctrine, and the action of the States, in retaining or abolishing the institution at pleasure, has conformed entirely to this principle. Now the subject of Federal interference has become one of some agitation, and Congress is solicited to adopt measures in relation to the District of Columbia, which have been shown to be most dangerous and destructive to the security and interests of the two slaveholding States by which it was ceded to the Federal Government. Your committee will not trouble the House to prove, that any measure of the Federal Legislature, which would have this tendency in those two States, would, from the very necessity of the case, and the unity of the interest wherever it exists, have the same tendency, measurably, in all the other slaveholding members of the Union. This position is too plain for argument. If, then, all the States were equally interested in the national objects for which this territory was ceded as the seat of the Federal Government: if that cession was designed by the framers of the constitution, to enure to the benefit of the whole confederacy, and was made in furtherance of that design; and if Congress, contrary to the obvious intent and spirit of the cession, shall do an act not required by the national objects contemplated by it, but directly repugnant to the interests and wishes of the citizens of the ceded territory, and calculated to disturb the peace, and endanger the interests, of the slaveholding members of the Union, such an act must be in violation of the public faith; of the faith reposed in Congress by the States that made the cession, and which would be deeply injured by such an exercise of power under it; and also of the faith reposed in that body by all the States, inasmuch as no independent State in the Union can be injured in its peace, or its rightful interests, by the action of the Federal Government, without a corresponding injury to every member of the confederated States.

Your committee have already shown that an interference with slavery in the District of Columbia, would involve a violation of the public faith, as regards the rights and interests of the citizens thereof. They recur to this topic, however, on account of its importance, and for the purpose of putting it in another light, and, as they consider, upon unanswerable ground. They are aware that, under the constitution,* Congress possesses "exclusive legislation" over the aforesaid District; but the power of legislation was given to be exercised for beneficial purposes only, and cannot, therefore, be exercised, consistently with public faith, for any object that is at war with the great principles upon which the Government itself is founded. The constitution, to be properly understood, must be taken as a whole. Wherever a particular power is granted, the extent to which it may be carried, can only be inferred from other provisions by which it may be regulated or restrained. The constitution, while it confers upon Congress exclusive legislation within this District, does not, and could not, confer unlimited or despotic authority over it. It could confer no power contrary to the fundamental principles of the constitution itself, and the essential and unalienable rights of American citizens. The right to legislate, therefore, (to make the constitution consistent with itself,) is evidently qualified by the provision that "no man shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law,"† and various others of a similar character. We lay it down as a rule, that no Government can do any thing directly repugnant to the principles of natural justice and of the social compact. It would be totally subversive of all the purposes for which government is instituted. Vattel says: "The great end of civil society is, whatever constitutes happiness with the peaceful possession of property." No republican would tolerate that a man should be punished, by a special statute, for an act not legally punishable at the time of its commission. No republican could approve any system of legislation by which private contracts, lawfully made, should be declared null and void, or by which the property of an individual, lawfully acquired, should be arbitrarily wrested from him by the high hand of power. But these great principles are not left for their support to the natural feelings of the human heart, or to the mere general spirit of republican government. They are expressly incorporated in the constitution, and they have also been recognised, and insisted on, by the Supreme Court of the United States, which lays down the following sound and incontrovertible doctrine: "There are acts which the Federal or State Legislatures cannot do, without exceeding their authority. There are certain vital principles in our free republican Government, which will determine and overrule an apparent and flagrant abuse of legislative power; as to authorize manifest injustice by positive law, or to take away that security for personal liberty or private property, for the protection whereof the Government was established. An act of the legislature, contrary to the great first principles of the social compact, cannot be considered a rightful exercise of legislative authority. The obligation of a law, in Governments established on express compact, and on republican principles, must be determined by the nature of the power on which it is founded. A few instances will suffice to explain. A law that punished a citizen for an innocent action, or that was in violation of an existing law; a law that destroys or impairs the obligation of the lawful private contracts of citizens; a law that makes a man a judge in his own case; or a law that takes property from A, and gives it to B. It is against all reason and justice for a people to entrust a legislature with such powers, and therefore it cannot be presumed that they have done it. The legislature may enjoy or permit, forbid or punish; they may declare new crimes, and establish rules of conduct for future cases; but they cannot change innocence into guilt, or punish innocence as a crime, or violate the rights of an antecedent lawful private contract, or the right of private property. To maintain that our Federal or State Legislatures possess such powers, even if they had not been expressly restrained, would be a political heresy, altogether inadmissible in our free republican Government."‡ Now, every principle here affirmed by the court, applies to, and protects, the people of this District, as well as the people of the States. The inhabitants of this District are a part of the people of the United States. Every right and interest secured by the constitution to the people of the States, is equally secured to the people of the District. Congress can therefore do no act affecting property or person, in relation to this District, which it is prohibited to do in relation to the citizens of the States, without a direct violation of the public faith. For instance, it is a well settled constitutional principle, that "private property shall not be taken for public use, without just compensation." Now, the true meaning of this provision obviously is, that private property shall be taken only for public use, but shall not be taken, even then, without adequate remuneration. It is evident, however, in reference to slavery, either that the Government would use the slaves, or that it would not. If it would use them, then they would not be emancipated; and it would be an idle mockery to talk of the freedom of those who would only cease to be private, to become public slaves. If it would not use them, then how could it be said that they were taken for the public use, consistently with the provision just recited? But even if they could be taken without reference to public use, they could not be taken without just compensation. It is exceedingly questionable, however, whether Congress could legally apply the public revenue to such an object, even with the consent of the owners of the slaves. As to emancipation without their consent, and without just compensation, your committee will not stop to consider it. It could not bear examination. Honor, humanity, policy, all forbid it. It is manifest, then, from all the considerations herein stated, (and there are others equally forcible that might be urged) that Congress could not abolish slavery in the District of Columbia, without a violation of the public faith.

Your committee will only add one or two reflections upon this interesting point.

What is the meaning of the declaration adopted by the House, in relation to the District of Columbia? Is it not, that Congress cannot, and will not, do an act which it has solemnly proclaimed to involve a violation of the public faith? Does it not afford every security to the South which it is in the power of the Federal Government to afford? Is it not tantamount, in its binding obligation upon the Government, to a positive declaration, that the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia would be unconstitutional? Nay, is it not even more efficacious in point of fact? Constitutional provisions are matters of construction. The opinion of one House, upon an abstract controverted point, may be overruled and reversed by another. But when Congress has solemnly declared that a particular act would be a violation of the public faith, is it to be supposed that it would ever violate a pledge thus given to the country? Can any abolitionist expect it? Need any citizen of a slave State fear it? What is public faith but the honor of the Government? Why are treaties regarded as sacred and inviolable? Why, but because they involve the pledge, and depend upon the sanctity of the national faith? Why are all compacts or promises made by Governments held to be irrevocably binding? Why, but because they cannot break them without committing perfidy, and destroying all confidence in their justice and integrity? Surely then, your committee may say with the utmost confidence, (and the sentiment will be ratified by every American heart) that the declaration now promulgated in relation to this subject, will not be departed from by any succeeding legislature, except under circumstances (should any such ever arise in the progress of our country) in which a departure from it would not be regarded by the slaveholding States themselves, as a wanton or arbitrary infraction of the public faith!

Your committee are further instructed to report, that, in the opinion of this House, Congress ought not to interfere in any way with slavery in the District of Columbia—

2dly. Because it would be unwise and impolitic!

It will be palpable to the minds of all, that if the committee have succeeded in establishing, as they think they have, that any such interference on the part of Congress would be a violation of the public faith, it would be a work of supererogation to attempt to show, that such an act would be unwise and impolitic: as there may be some, however, who may not agree with them in their arguments or conclusions upon that point, they feel bound, under the instruction of the House, to offer a few suggestions under this head.

The Federal Government was the creation of the States of the Confederacy, and the great objects of its creation and organization "were to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, and provide for the common defence and general welfare."

Apply these principles, then, to an interference by Congress with slavery in the District of Columbia. Such action, to be politic, must be in accordance with some one of those great objects; and it will be the duty of the committee, in as concise a manner as possible, to show that it would not be in accordance with either of them.

First, then, as to the District itself.

It has already been shown, that any interference, unsolicited by the inhabitants of the District, cannot "establish justice," or promote the cause of justice within it, but directly the reverse. No greater degree of slavery exists here now, than did exist when the constitution was adopted, and then the inhabitants of the District were citizens of the States of Maryland and Virginia, and had a voice in the adoption of that instrument. Surely their subsequent transfer to the jurisdiction of Congress, made in conformity with that constitution, could not deprive them of the protection to which they were entitled by these great leading principles of it. On the contrary, they had every right to expect that Congress would "establish justice," as to them, in strict compliance with the great charter under which it acted, and by which it is forbidden to interfere with the rights of private property, without their consent, or in any way to affect, injuriously, their domestic institutions. Of those institutions, slavery was, and is, the most important; and any attempt on the part of Congress, acting as the local Legislature of the District, to abolish it, would not only be impolitic, but an act of gross injustice and oppression.

Secondly, as to the States of the Union. Here again, your committee have but to refer to their former remarks, to show that the abolition of slavery in the District would not "establish justice," but work great injustice to the surrounding States in particular, and to all the slave States in general, and in a degree proportioned to their proximity to the District, and to the influence upon the institution of slavery in the Union, of such action on the part of Congress. They have also shown that the abolition of slavery here, so far from tending to "ensure domestic tranquillity," would have a direct tendency to produce domestic discord and violence, and servile war, in all the slaveholding States. As these consequences, then, would follow such action in reference to the States, your committee need not say, that, instead of providing for "the common defence by it," Congress would be called upon to provide for the common defence "in consequence of it, and to an extent which cannot now be foreseen. Seeing, then, that the American Confederacy was formed for the great objects of providing for "the common defence and general welfare," it follows, necessarily, that Congress is not only restrained from the commission of any act by which these objects may be frustrated, but that it is bound to sustain and promote them. The same provision of the constitution* which requires it to call out the militia to "suppress insurrections," unquestionably imposes the corresponding obligation upon it, to commit no act by which an insurrectionary spirit may be excited. The same provision which enjoins it on the Federal Government to "guaranty to each State a republican form of government, and to aid and protect each State against domestic violence,"† evidently implies the correlative obligation to take no step, of which the direct and inevitable tendency would be to overthrow the State Governments, and to involve them in wide spread scenes of misery and desolation. In one word, if it be the duty of Congress, as it most clearly is, to support and preserve the constitution and the Union, then it is manifest, that it is bound to avoid the adoption of any legislation which may lead to their destruction. Your committee consider these positions too obvious to require argument or illustration. They consider it equally manifest, that any attempt to abolish slavery in the District, would necessarily tend to the deplorable consequences to which they have adverted. Congress, therefore, is bound, by every principle of duty which forbids it to interfere with slavery in any of the States, to abstain from any similar interference in the District of Columbia.

Your committee have already adverted to the evils that would necessarily result to the surrounding States, and to the slave States generally, from any interference by Congress with the institution of slavery in the District of Columbia. The nature and magnitude of those evils, however, require that they should be exhibited more fully and distinctly. The question is, whether slavery ought to be abolished in the District of Columbia? Now suppose the affirmative of this proposition were sustained by Congress, what would it be but indirect legislation, or rather direct interference, as regards the rights and property of the southern States. And can any one imagine that such a state of things would be patiently borne? But this is not all; nay, it is not half the evil that would follow. Could slavery be abolished in the District without leading directly and inevitably to insubordination and revolt throughout the south? And can any one desire to produce such results? Is there a man who has forgotten the history of St. Domingo, or the insurgent attempt at Charleston, or the tragical scenes at Southampton! or the recent and lamentable occurrences in the States of Louisiana and Mississippi? or is there an individual who would wish them repeated, and extended throughout the entire region of the south? Why, then, will infatuated individuals persist in pressing a scheme, which is not only impracticable, as regards the States, but fraught with evil to the very objects it is proposed to benefit? True philanthropy would avoid this subject, seeing the distraction it creates, and the dreadful consequences it involves. It would leave it to those whom it most concerns, and who alone are competent to act upon it. It would trust to time, and to the gradual operation of causes which may arise of themselves, but which can neither be produced nor hastened by foreign interference, or the power of this Government. Why, then, your committee earnestly repeat, why urge a measure which is clearly impracticable in itself, which none but the slaveholding States have a right to act on, and which has increased, and will always increase, the hardships and restraints of those for whose imaginary benefit they are waging this cruel and fanatical crusade?

We have said that the scheme of general emancipation is impracticable. The slightest reflection must satisfy every candid mind of the truth of this assertion.

Admitting that the Federal Government had a right to act upon this matter, which it clearly has not, it certainly never could achieve such an operation without full compensation to the owners. And what would probably be the amount required? The aggregate value of all that species of property is not less probably than four hundred millions of dollars! And how could such an amount be raised? Will the people of this country ever consent to the imposition of oppressive taxes, that the proceeds may be applied to the purchase of slaves? The idea is preposterous; and not only that, but it is susceptible of demonstration, that even if an annual appropriation of ten millions were actually applied to the purchase and transportation of slaves, the whole number would not be sensibly diminished at the expiration of half a century, from the natural growth and multiplication of the race. Burthen the Treasury as we might, it would still be an endless expense and an interminable work. And this view of the subject surely is sufficient of itself to prove, that of all the schemes ever projected by fanaticism, the idea of universal emancipation is the most visionary and impracticable.

But even if the scheme were practicable, what would be gained by effecting it? Suppose that Congress could emancipate all the slaves in the Union, is such a result desirable? This question is addressed to the sober sense of the people of America. Would it be politic or advantageous? Would it contribute to the wealth, or grandeur, or happiness of our country? On the contrary, would it not produce consequences directly the reverse? Are not the slaves unfit for freedom; notoriously ignorant, servile, and depraved? and would any rational man have them instantaneously transformed into freemen, with all the rights and privileges of American citizens? Are they capable of understanding correctly the nature of our Government, or exercising judiciously a single political right or privilege. Nay, would they even be capable of earning their own livelihood, or rearing their families independently by their own ingenuity and industry! What then would follow from their liberation, but the most deplorable state of society with which any civilized country was ever cursed? How would vice and immorality, and licentiousness, overrun the land? How many jails and penitentiaries, that now seldom hold a prisoner, would be crowded to suffocation? How many fertile fields, that now yield regular and abundant harvests, would lie unoccupied and desolate? How would the foreign commerce of the south decline and disappear? How many thousands of seamen, of whom southern agriculture is the very life, would be driven for support to foreign countries? And how large a portion of the federal revenue, derived from foreign commodities exchanged for southern products, would be lost forever to this Government? And, in addition to all this, what would be the condition of southern society, were all the slaves emancipated? Would the whites consent that the blacks should be placed upon a full footing of equality with them? Unquestionably not! Either the one class or the other would be forced to emigrate, and, in either case, the whole region of the south would be a scene of poverty and ruin. Or, what is still more probable, the blacks would every where be driven before the whites, as the Indians have been, until they were exterminated from the earth. And surely it is unnecessary to remark, that decay and desolation could not break down the south, without producing a corresponding depression upon the wealth and enterprise of the northern States. And here let us ask, too, what would be the condition of the non-slaveholding States themselves, as regards the blacks? Are they prepared to receive myriads of negroes, and place them upon an equality with the free white laborers and mechanics, who constitute their pride and strength? Will the new States consent that their territory shall be occupied by negroes, instead of the enterprising, intelligent, and patriotic white population, which is daily seeking their borders from other portions of the Union? Shall the yeomanry of those States be surrounded by thousands of such beings, and the white laborer forced into competition and association with them? Are they to enjoy the same civil and political privileges as the free white citizens of the north and west, and to be admitted into the social circle as their friends and companions? Nothing less than all this will constitute perfect freedom and the principles now maintained by those who advocate emancipation would, if carried out, necessarily produce this state of things! Yet, who believes that it would be tolerated for a moment? Already have laws been passed in several of the non-slaveholding States to exclude free blacks from a settlement within their limits; and a prospect of general and immediate abolition would compel them, in self-defence, to resort to a system of measures much more rigorous and effective than any which have yet been adopted. Driven from the south then, the blacks would find no place of refuge in the north; and, as before remarked, utter extermination would be the probable, if not the inevitable, fate of the whole race. Where is the citizen then, that can desire such results? Where the American who can contemplate them without emotion? Where the abolitionist that will not pause, in view of the direful consequences of his scheme, both to the whites and the blacks, to the north and the south, and to the whole Union at large?

Your committee deem it their duty to say that, in their opinion, the people of the south have been very unjustly censured in reference to slavery. It is not their purpose, however, to defend them. Their character, as men and citizens, needs no vindication from us. Wherever it is known it speaks for itself, nor would any wantonly traduce it, but those assassins of reputation, who are also willing to be the destroyers of life. Exaggerated pictures have been drawn of the hardships of the slave, and every effort made to malign the south, and to enlist against it both the religious and political feeling of the north. Your committee cannot too strongly express their unanimous and unqualified disapprobation of all such movements. The constitution, under which we live, was framed by our common ancestors, to preserve the liberty and independence achieved by their united efforts in the council and the field. In all our contests with foreign enemies, the south has exhibited an unwavering attachment to the common cause. Where is the spot of which Americans are prouder than the plains of Yorktown? Or, when was Britain more humbled, or America more honored, than by the victory of New Orleans? All our history, from the revolution down, attests the high, and uniform, and devoted patriotism of the south. Her domestic institutions are her own. They were brought into the Union with her, and secured by the compact which makes us one people; and he who would sow dissensions among members of the same great political family, by assailing the institutions, and impugning the character of the citizens of the south, should be regarded as an enemy to the peace and prosperity of our common country.

If there is a feature by which the present age may be said to be characterized, it is that sickly sentimentality which, disregarding the pressing claims and wants of its own immediate neighborhood, or town, or State, wastes and dissipates itself in visionary, and often very mischievous, enterprizes, for the imaginary benefit of remote communities. True philanthropy, rightly understood and properly applied, is one of the purest and most ennobling principles of our nature; but, misdirected or perverted, it degenerates into that fell spirit of fanaticism which disregards all ties, and tramples on all obstacles, however sacred or venerable, in the relentless prosecution of its horrid purposes. Experience proves, however, that, when individuals in one place, mistaking the true character of benevolence, rashly undertake, at the imminent hazard of conflict and convulsion, to remedy what they are pleased to consider evils and distresses in another, it is naturally regarded by those who are thus injured, either as a species of madness which may be repelled or resisted, as any other madness may, or as manifesting a feeling of hostility on the one side, which must necessarily produce corresponding alienation on the other. It is all important, therefore, that the spirit of abolition, or in other words, of illegal and officious interference with the domestic institutions of the south, should be arrested and put down; and men of intelligence and influence at the north should endeavor to produce that sound and rational state of public opinion which is equally due to the south and to the preservation of the Union.

And this brings your committee to the last position they have been instructed to sustain; and that is, that, in the opinion of this House, Congress ought not to interfere, in any way, with slavery in the District of Columbia.

3dly. Because it would be dangerous to the Union.

The first great object enumerated in the constitution, as an inducement to its adoption, was to "form a more perfect union." At that time, all the States held slaves, to a greater or less extent; and slavery in the States was fully recognised and provided for, in many particulars, in that instrument itself. It was recognised, however, and all the provisions upon the subject so regarded it, as a State, and not a national institution. At that time, too, as has been before remarked, the District of Columbia constituted an integral part of two of the independent States which became parties to the Confederacy and to the constitution itself. Since that time an entire emancipation of slaves has taken place in several of the old States; but in all cases this has been the work of the States themselves, without any interference whatever by the Federal Government. New States have also been admitted into the Union, with an interdiction in their constitutions against involuntary servitude. In this way, the slave States have become a minority in representation in the Federal Legislature. Their interests, however, as States, in the institution of domestic slavery, as it exists within their limits, have not diminished, nor has their right to perfect security under the constitution, in reference to this description of property, been in any way, or to any degree, surrendered or impaired, since the adoption of that instrument by themselves and their sister States.

The operation of causes, to a great extent natural, and proceeding from climate, soil, and consequent production, has rendered slavery a local and sectional institution, and has thus added another to the most alarming apprehensions of patriots for the perpetuity of this Union—the apprehension of local and geographical interests and distinctions. How immensely important is it then, that Congress should do no act, and assume no jurisdiction, in reference to this great interest, by which it shall ever appear to place itself in the attitude of a local, instead of a national tribunal—a partial agent, providing for peculiar and sectional objects and feelings, instead of a general and paternal legislature, equally and impartially promoting the general welfare of all the States. No one can fail to see, that any other course on the part of Congress, must weaken the confidence of the injured States in the federal authority, and, to the same extent, prove "dangerous to the Union."

Since the adoption of the Federal Constitution, the District of Columbia has been ceded to the United States as a seat of the Federal Government; but not only many eminent statesmen of the country, but all of the slaveholding States, speaking through their legislative assemblies, firmly believe and insist that the cession so made has conferred upon Congress no constitutional power to abolish slavery within the ceded territory. Your committee have abstained from an examination of this question, because they were not instructed to discuss it. But they have no hesitation to say, that, in the view they have taken of the whole question, the obligations of Congress not to act on this subject are as fully binding and insuperable as a positive constitutional interdiction, or an open acknowledgment of want of power.

Considering the subject in this light, your committee have already proved, that any interference by Congress with the subject of slavery, would be evidently calculated to injure the interests and disturb the peace of the slaveholding States; and if they have succeeded in establishing this position, no argument is necessary to show, that such consequences, springing from the action of Congress as the local legislature of the District, would eminently endanger the existence of this Union. It has also been shown, that Congress, as the legislature of the Union, can have no constitutional power over this subject; and that its powers, as a local legislature of the District, were granted for the mere purpose of rendering its general powers perfect and free from conflict and collision with State authorities. It has also been shown that these local powers should be so exercised as to confer the greatest benefits upon the citizens residing within the District, with the least possible injury to the peculiar interests of any State, or the general interests of all the States. Your committee have also shown, as they think successfully, that the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia would be a deep injury to the citizens of the District, and, therefore, a violation of the trust reposed in Congress as the local legislature of the District; and, also, that it would inflict an incurable injury upon all the slaveholding States, and would, therefore, be an equal violation of the trust reposed in that body as the Legislature of the Union. If, then, they have established these positions, as they think they have, can any one doubt that the action contemplated would be "dangerous to the Union?" being directly calculated, as it would be, to weaken the confidence of the District in Congress as a safe and faithful local legislature, and the confidence of the slaveholding States, as an impartial guardian of their interests.

Important as the Union is to each State, and to the whole American people, every one will admit that, as far as possible, strict impartiality and kind feelings to all the interests and all the sections of the country should characterize the action of the Federal Government. The Union was formed for the common and equal benefit of all the States, and for the perfect and equal protection of the rights and interests of all the citizens of all the States. Its only strength is in the confidence of the States, and of the people, that these great benefits will continue to be secured to them, and that these great purposes will be accomplished by its preservation. Any action, therefore, on the part of Congress, which shall weaken or destroy that confidence in any portion of our citizens, or in any State of the Union, must inevitably, to that extent, endanger the Union itself! Who can doubt this reasoning? Who does not know that the agitation of any question connected with domestic slavery, as it exists his country, among any portion of our citizens, creates apprehension and excitement in the slaveholding States? Who does not know that the agitation of any such question in either branch of Congress, shakes their confidence in the security of their most important interests, and, consequently, in the continuance to them of those great benefits, to secure which they became parties to the Union? Who then does not believe that any action by Congress, having for its object the abolition of slavery in any portion of the Union, however narrow or limited it may be, would necessarily impair the confidence of the slaveholding States in their security in relation to this description of property, put an end to all their hope of benefits to be derived to them from the further continuance of the Union, and alienate their affections from it? Were Congress, in a single instance, to suffer itself to be impelled by mere feeling in one portion of the Union, to attempt a gratification of that feeling at the sacrifice of the dearest interests and most sacred rights of another portion, who can doubt that the Union would be seriously endangered, if not destroyed! But this conclusion does not depend upon reasoning alone. The evidences of public sentiment on this point, are equally abundant and decisive. Your committee having already extended their report beyond the limits to which they could have wished to confine it, will enter into no details upon this portion of their duty. Suffice it to say that the Legislatures of several, if not all, the slaveholding States, have solemnly resolved that "Congress has no constitutional authority to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia." It would be utterly impossible, therefore, that any such attempt should be made by Congress, without producing an excitement, and involving consequences, which no patriot can contemplate without the most painful emotions. It would be regarded by the slaveholding States as an entering wedge to a scheme of general emancipation, and, therefore, tend to produce the same results, in relation to the Federal Government and the Union, that would be produced by the adoption of any measure directly affecting the domestic institutions of the States themselves. Your committee will not dwell upon the picture that is thus presented to their minds. The reflection it excites is one of mingled bitterness and horror. It is one, they trust, which is never to be realized. Looking upon their beloved country, as it now stands, the envy and admiration of the world; contemplating, as they do, that unrivalled constitution, by which a beauteous family of confederated States, each independent in its own separate sphere, revolve around a Federal head with all the harmony and regularity of the planetary system; and knowing as they do, that under the beneficent influence of our free institutions, the people of this country enjoy a degree of liberty, prosperity and happiness, not only unpossessed, but scarcely imagined, by any other upon earth; they cannot and will not advert to the horrors, or depict the consequences of that most awful day, when the sun of American freedom shall go down in blood, and nothing remain of this glorious Republic but the bleeding, scattered, and dishonored fragments. It would, indeed, be the extinction of the world's last hope, and the jubilee of tyranny over all the earth!

But your committee feel, that with these painful impressions on their minds, they would but imperfectly discharge their duty if they did not make an earnest appeal to the patriotism of the American People to sustain the resolution adopted by the House. And they would also appeal to the good sense and good feelings of that portion of the abolitionists, who, acting under a mistaken sense of moral and religious duty, have embarked in this crusade against the South, solemnly invoking them in the name of our common country, to abstain from a system of agitation which has not only failed, and will always fail, to attain its objects, but has even brought the Union itself into a state of imminent and fearful peril. It is confidently believed that this appeal will not be made in vain, and that hereafter all who truly love their country will manifest their patriotism by avoiding this unhappy cause of discord and disunion; and that they will make no further exertions upon a subject, from the continued agitation of which nothing but augmented evils can result.

Your committee conclude by reporting the following resolutions, conformably to the instructions given them by the House:

Resolved, That Congress possesses no constitutional authority to interfere in any way with the institution of slavery in any of the States of this Confederacy.
